Western Ireland

Western Ireland

Due west of Dublin lies the city of Galway, a great place to start a tour in the west of Ireland and no less of a cultural hotspot than its counterpart on the east coast. Galway hosts its own Arts festival in July that attracts 150,000 visitors enjoying events in 51 venues across the city. If you can't be there in July, head to Quay Street for some excellent nightlife and local colour. Head out of the city and north along the coast to Westport and take a ride along the Great Western Greenway. This 42km converted railway is the longest off road walking and cycling track in Ireland and leads you through some stunning coastal scenery and picturesque villages. Further north again on the windswept cliff tops near Ballina, lie the Ceide Fields and its award winning visitors centre.

This Neolithic site lay undiscovered in a bog for 5000 years until 1930, when a local school teacher excavating peat for fuel found the beginnings of a stone wall.

If you would like to learn some of Ireland's more recent history head to the National Museum of Ireland in Turlough Park, Castlebar, the authoritative voice on Irish heritage, culture and history. With free admission and over 4 million objects catalogued it will provide a great insight into Irish life throughout the centuries.

Places to visit

Achill Island

Unspoilt scenery and beautiful beaches bring the tourists to Achill Island, particularly in the summer months. Technically still an Island, but now joined to the mainland by a bridge. Discover deserted villages, abandoned quartz mines and spectacular mountains and cliffs.

Address: On the R319, Achill Island, Co Mayo.

The Cliffs of Moher

An 8 km stretch of sea cliffs rising 700 ft up from the ocean. Primarily made of sandstone and home to an estimated 30,000 birds, there are dramatic views to be had from the top of the cliffs and from O' Brien's Tower located on the edge. A visitor's centre costing 32 million euro's uses renewable energy and explores the geology, habitat and history of the cliffs.

Address: Liscannor, Co Clare.

Ireland's School of Falconry

The oldest falconry school in Ireland situated in the grounds of Ashford castle. They can offer you the chance to fly a hawk around the spectacular gardens and grounds with an instructor present. As you fly the hawks, your instructor will explain about their exceptional eyesight, their speed and agility and how the hawks were trained.

Address: Ashford Castle, Cong, Co Mayo.
