Spain, Barcelona

The city of Barcelona is located in the north east of the Iberian Peninsula on the shores of the Mediterranean, and is the capital of the once independent Catalan region of Spain. 75km to the north are the foothills of the Pyrenees and beyond the Languedoc region of France.

The city has had a chequered past and control has changed hands several times since it was first founded by the Romans. In its early history it was ruled by the Visigoths, the Arabs and the counts of Catalonia, and after the fall of the city to Franco's coup de Etat in 1939, the local Catalan language was suppressed and the autonomous regions abolished.

Renowned for its exciting architecture, most famously its medieval quarter and buildings created in the Art Nouveau period by Antoni Gaudi. Barcelona is also home to the Barcelona pavillion designed by Mies van der Rohe for the International Exposition of 1929.

Barcelona has in recent years been leading the way in world class cuisine and chefs in the city have been giving the traditional Catalan flavours a modern twist, utilizing the delicious and varied local produce.

It has been called 'the most extraordinary personal interpretation of Gothic architecture since the Middle Ages.
