Dumfries

Dumfries, 'the Queen of the South', is a historic country town, famed for its connection with Scotland's National Bard Robert Burns.

Dumfries lies on the banks of the River Nith and this charming town, which became a royal burgh in the 12th century, has countless attractions as well as an intriguing history.

Dumfries has been home to various well-known individuals, including J.M. Barrie, author of Peter Pan and, of course, Robert Burns. The town has a number of sites associated with the bard who lived in Dumfries in his later years and died there in 1796. Burns' former house is now a museum dedicated to him while the town also boasts his favourite howff - or drinking haunt - the Globe Inn.

Robert Burns lived in nearby Ellisland Farm from 1788 to 1791. It was here, inspired by the tranquil setting, that many of Burns' finest songs and poems, including Tam o' Shanter and the world-famous Auld Lang Syne were penned.

The town's High Street is home to many well-known shopping chains alongside independent retailers. There are a variety of places for eating out and several supermarkets to cater for all your food necessities.

Places to visit

Robert Burns House

It was in this ordinary sandstone building that Robert Burns, Scotland's national poet, spent the last years of his brilliant life. Now a place of pilgrimage for Burns enthusiasts from around the world, the house retains much of its eighteenth century character and contains many relics of the poet. There is the chair in which he wrote his last poems, many original letters and manuscripts, and the famous Kilmarnock and Edinburgh editions of his work.

Address: Burns Street, Dumfries, DG1 2PS
Tel: 01387 255297

Museum of Lead Mining

'Lead mining': even the phrase has a sort of dulling effect on the brain, and you'd think it'd be a tough ask to make the subject interesting. But at the Museum of Lead Mining at little Wanlockhead, signposted ten miles off the motorway northwest of Moffat, they pull it off. Tariff: Adult £7.75, Child £5.70

Address: Visitor Centre, Wanlockhead, Dumfries and Galloway, ML12 6UT
Tel: +44 (0) 1659 74387

Caerlaverock Castle

Caerlaverock Castle is a moated triangular castle first built in the 13th century. It is located on the southern coast of Scotland, 11 kilometres south of Dumfries, on the edge of the Caerlaverock National Nature Reserve
Address: Caerlaverock, Dumfries, DG1 4RU
