

Dumfries and Galloway can be found in the south west of Scotland. Just north of the English border, you can explore acres of forest and green spaces or marvel at the undulating coastline of rocky shores and sandy beaches. A favourite spot for outdoor activities it is popular with hikers, mountain bikers and windsurfers. If you're not feeling quite so energetic, relax and enjoy the stunning countryside by making the most of the many pubs and restaurants that will be happy to welcome you. With more than a few distilleries in the area, the most difficult part of your visit will be which local dram to try first.

Famous for its arts, crafts and performing arts it is also home to some of Scotland's coolest music festivals. From the beautiful gardens, blessed by the warm climate, to the fascinating museums covering aviation, the war effort and Robert Burns, there's plenty of things to do.

Places to visit

Robert Burns House

Simple sandstone house in a quiet Dumfries street that Robert Burns, Scotland's national poet, spent the last years of his life. The house shows us how the poet and his family lived in the late eighteenth century.
