France, Dijon

Dijon is an architecturally rich city and the centre has some remarkable buildings dating from between the 12th and 15th centuries. Fortunately they have remained more or less untouched by the effects of war, even though the city has been occupied by everyone from the Prussians and Swiss to the Germans in the Second World War.

Positioned on a plain, Dijon lies on the banks of the river Ouche with the cote (hills) that give the area its name to the south. 198 miles to the north is Paris and Lyon is equidistant to the south. The area is notable for its mustard, created in 1856 when juice from unripe grapes was substituted for vinegar by Jean Naigeon, its local vineyards, where some of the world's most expensive wines are produced and crème de cassis, a local blackcurrant liqueur that is added to white wine to produce the drink 'Kir'.

The city has numerous fantastic museums, including the Musée des Beaux-Arts de Dijon, one of the oldest in France. Housed in the Palace of the Duke of Burgundy, the world renowned collections include an encyclopaedic collection that references everything from Egyptian art to the 20th century. Dijon holds an International and Gastronomic Fair every year in autumn. With over 500 exhibitors and 200,000 visitors every year, it is one of the ten most important fairs in France.
